You're reading Entrepreneur India, an international franchise of Entrepreneur Media. The popularity of online gaming industry has reached new heights, riding piggybank on ubiquitous smartphones in India. Shutterstock Mobile gaming is the most user-friendly medium in the online gaming domain. With the industry changing so fast, it would be interesting to note how new technologies change future of gaming.A report titled, "Online gaming in India: Reaching a new pinnacle" by Google India and KPMG predicted that by 2021the size of the industry would grow to $1 billion from $ 290 million.The report emphasized that increasing internet penetration would catalyze the growth of digital games. Other factors include rise in the manufacturing of budget smartphones and improved digital payment practices.However, limited development of local games and paid ones are major challenges in this high-potential industry.Piyush Kumar, CEO and Founder, Rooter and Madhav Gupta, Co-founder & Partner, Baadshah Gaming, told the Entrepreneur India that the greater use of smartphones has taken the gaming industry to a whole new level.Gaming Industry Moving Away From Consoles And PcsKumar reasoned, "Our world has shrunk to fit into a smartphone screen, where we virtually live throughout the day. Besides regular communication features, these devices also fulfill a need that has now become basic — entertainment."The gaming industry is moving away from consoles and PCs/ Macs and is skewed towards mobile phones, following the success of Pokemon Go and other such games in 2016."Consumers have spent 25% more on mobile games in 2016, as compared to that in 2015 as per IDC and App Annie report. The data also suggests that while games only constitute 35 per cent of total iOS and Google Play app downloads, but the revenue generation is more than 80 per cent," he said."eSports constitute a large part of the gaming industry and with the growth of TV viewership of sports in India, the sports gaming market will expand further," he added.India Players Now Looking For Added Thrill In Gaming ExperienceGupta said the online gaming industry was poised to grow at a pace much higher than that predicted by the Google and KPMG report."One of the major contributing factors to this growth is the availability of cheaper smartphones and lowering of consumable data cost. The emergence of Indian companies has further fuelled the growth with the creation of country-centric content for players," he explained, adding that Indian players have evolved and are now seeking thrill in gaming experience. He further stated that with easy accessibility to various gaming portals and flexible regulations in the country, the sector is gearing up for a revolution.The Sector To Benefit From Emerging TechnologiesVishal Dhupar, Managing Director, South Asia, Nvidia said unprecedented spread of Net connectivity, access to data at cheap rates and greater use of mobile phones have the business grow at such a fast pace."AI is developing fast, and its core functions of computing, sensing and cognition will be used to improve the gaming experience. The gaming industry will draw from AI, Big Data, cloud service and other emerging technologies and use animation, literature, movie and live broadcasting to generate disruptive content. Game developers are expected to increase investment in research and development to improve quality and spend less time in chasing trends," he explained. Now that folks are getting their very own PS5, they've got a lot to explore - and one feature that's made a welcome return from the last generation is the ability to play PS5 games on your smartphone.The feature is, of course, Remote Play, which has been a staple in Sony's systems since the PS3, which debuted with the ability to play console games on their PSP and PS Vita. Once the PS4 debuted, Remote Play extended to other devices and TVs - and eventually, to Android and iOS devices.The PS5 has launched with Remote Play intact, and you too can use it to stream your next-gen games to your smartphone. Note that this is a feature, not a service; you'll still need a PS5 console running games you own to stream on your phone, which is different to how you can play Xbox Series X games on your mobile device through Game Pass. That means you've gotta stay near your PS5 to use Remote Play - the feature is intended to pick up and keep playing on your phone or other device within the bounds of your home Wi-Fi network. If you need to surrender your TV or just want to play in another room, Remote Play makes it happen. It's still pretty neat to play next-gen through your phone, tablet, PC, or PS Vita using Remote Play - and here's how to turn your smartphone into a mobile PS5 station.(Image credit: Future)You'll need a PS5 (either the digital or standard model) updated to the latest system software, whatever smartphone you want to play on, and a Wi-Fi network getting at least 5Mbps download speeds that both console and phone are connected to. Sorry, it's entirely tied to that Wi-Fi network - no mobile data - so expect to use it at home.If you want to use a DualSense controller, you'll need one of those, too. Sony hasn't explicitly confirmed that it will work with the PS5's Remote Play feature, but we've anecdotally been able to use them on smartphones. You can use a PS4-era DualShock 4 controller with Remote Play, but only to play PS4 games through your PS5. While you don't need a controller to play on your phone, as the mobile app offers a digital button layout, it's no real substitute for the fine control of a gamepad. If you don't have a PS4 gamepad, you can pick up on the cheap with our roundup of the best PS4 controller deals right now, or try your hand at getting a PS5 DualSense deal. You'll also need a PlayStation Network account - don't worry, it's free, and you should need one anyway to set up your PS5. To use the Remote Play app, your phone needs to be updated to at least Android 7.0 or iOS 12.1. And if you want to link a PS4 DualShock 4 or PS5 DualSense controller to your phone, make sure you've updated to the latest version of the OS - at least Android 10 or iOS 13 for the older console's controller, and to be safe, the absolute latest version of Android 11 or iOS 14 for the DualSense (Sony hasn't released official compatibility info yet).Finally, you'll need to download the appropriate Remote Play app on the phone you want to use, either on Android or iOS (opens in new tab). If you already have it, update to the latest version to get PS5-linking capability. (Image credit: Sony / Google / Apple)How to set it upFirst, fire up your PS5 (or set it to rest mode) and open the Remote Play app on your smartphone. Sign in to your PlayStation Network account on the latter and choose which console generation you're connecting to - in this case, PS5. If your console is linked to the same Wi-Fi network as your phone, it should connect automatically.If there are multiple PS5's on your home network (and how lucky you must be), it might take some trial-and-error to figure out which console code refers to the right one. And if you keep losing your connection to the console, try resetting its Wi-Fi connectivity, or better yet, improve your connection speed by manually hooking your PS5 up to your router via ethernet cable (remember, Sony recommends at least a 5Mbps download speed, but you'll likely notice input lag at that minimum). Once it loads up, you should be able to control the console through your smartphone. If you plan on using a DualSense controller, make sure to connect it to your phone via Bluetooth first. (Image credit: Future)What's playable?Thankfully, Remote Play is literally just streaming the PS5 to your phone, so there's no apparent limit on what games you can play so long as it runs on the new console...with a couple exceptions. As per the feature's previous limits for its version on the PS4, you won't be able to use Remote Play for games or experiences that require special controllers or the PlayStation Camera. That means no VR, sadly.Otherwise, enjoy playing your PS5 experience from the comfort of the next room (or rooms) over. Nintendo to announce its first smartphone game Nintendo's first game developed for smartphones will finally be revealed Thursday."We will talk about details tomorrow," Nintendo President Tatsumi Kimishima told the Wall Street Journal today, breaking a nearly 7-month silence on the company's expansion into smartphone game development.The video game giant announced back in March 2015 that it would team up with Japanese developer DeNA Co. to develop multiple smartphone games using Nintendo properties. While little else had been announced at that time, Nintendo planned to release its first game by the end of this year, along with four more titles to be completed by spring 2017.Now, we hope we get a good look at the first title tomorrow.Why now?Nintendo's decision to enter the mobile game market was a surprising yet ultimately an understandable move.The company, once vehemently against joining the smartphone market, typically uses its own line of hardware to house its video game franchises, from the classic Legend of Zelda series to the more recent Splatoon, a competitive multiplayer game featuring funky-fresh squid/kid hybrids.However, as disappointing sales numbers emerged for the 3DS portable game system and tablet-influenced Wii U console, Nintendo looked to new avenues for revenue.While Nintendo's console efforts may be struggling, turning to the smartphone gaming market could prove lucrative. The ubiquity of smartphones has provided a whole new mass market for gaming, with breakout hits like Candy Crush Saga, Clash of Clans, and Angry Birds becoming a regular fixture of home screens and daily commutes worldwide. Bethesda free-to-play Fallout Shelter, announced suddenly this summer during E3, raked in a reported $5.1 million in microtransactions over the course of two weeks.Will it work?Nintendo's long history in video game development, combined with its instantly recognizable stable of characters such as Mario, Donkey Kong and Pikachu, could easily find a new home on iOS and Android.At this time, possibilities are endless for what Nintendo might bring out. Will it be a simple Mario-themed infinite runner in the vein of Temple Run or Spider-Man Unlimited? Perhaps something to do with Pokémon Go? A free-to-play Animal Crossing you engage with friends on your contact list? Or, it could be something completely new, given the company's track record of creating new franchises tor trailblazing unto a new platform. For now, all we can do is speculate and wait till tomorrow.Everything you need to know about the Nintendo NX
